The Urban Health Equity Seminar Series provides an opportunity for students, faculty and practitioners whose work lies at the nexus of Public Health and City Planning to exchange ideas and develop innovations in this growing field. This seminar series aims to build an interdisciplinary community of research and action focused on issues of urban health equity and environmental justice through a variety of formats including sharing existing research, lectures, group workshops, film screenings and critical debates on current issues. Our goal is to support existing research while also expanding the scope and impact of urban health work on the UCB campus through such activities as collaborative paper and grant writing, new course development and organizing future symposiums and speakers.

All seminars will be held on Thursdays from 2pm-4pm in room 305 Wurster Hall.
